I am very pleased to announce that I was able to hold a meeting yesterday afternoon for almost an hour and three quarters with Adam Jacobs, one of the Aragon math cochairpersons. Alice Hu, a precalculus teacher at the school was also able to attend for part of this time.

I am not going to go into details of the meeting in this forum, but simply want to express my thanks to the two of them for giving my concerns a very fair hearing and engaging in constructive dialog. I hope this meeting leads to at least modest improvements in the program which is in a trial period at Aragon.

I held off on posting additional articles on education while this meeting was in the works. I still have a few more topics to cover on more general issues and will resume the series soon.

Sincerely,

David Kristofferson
